Executive Summary

As research, teaching and everyday living increasingly rely on global networks for the creation, storage and dissemination of knowledge, the need to educate the information-literate scholars/students/citizens has become more widely recognised. All of them, often lack the skills necessary to succeed in this rapidly changing environment, and they need training and support to make use of new technologies for effective teaching and learning. The current environment provides an opportunity for librarians to play a key role in the evolution of an integrated information literacy curriculum.

The concept of a Life Long Learning must take place throughout an individual's life if she or he is expected to be active in the society. Librarians themselves, are aware of the fact that they need CPE if they should provide lifelong learning opportunities for their users. It is of crucial importance that librarians are able to manage knowledge in order to provide easy access to information as fundamental principle of democracy. Citizens need empowering especially in IT technology if they are to exercise their rights and duties in democratic processes and if they are to be involved in economical development and local community decision making.

Information professionals have the opportunity to take a leading role in developing and delivering the learning support strategies, which will be appropriate to this new environment. In response to these challenges a well-organised Training Centre for Continuing Education of Librarians would be of a great importance.
